

Test World A — World Export

World Overview

- Current party stance: The party believes they have been hired to escort a disputed merchant ledger from the river town of Brackenford to the provincial capital of Ilyr's Gate. They are told the job is routine, except that three previous couriers have gone missing on the western road.
- World overview and description: The campaign takes place in Veyr, a damp river kingdom built over older imperial roads, buried toll shrines, and frontier forts that nobody has had the money to maintain properly in two generations. Trade is controlled by guild ledgers and river charters, but the old border country is starting to behave strangely again.
- The under-road bells stopped after the acceptance of the public account, marking a significant moment in the campaign's narrative.
- The party levels up to level 5 after escaping the purge room, but they are left with very low resources.
- Caul escaped through a crown route after the encounter, and the city switch was partially stabilized, leaving the party with outstanding plot threads to resolve.
- Note that the party stopped two filings but Caul completed one during the conflict in the Deep Charter Vault.
- Capture the moment when the vault shifted and the city bells rang in sequence from west to east, indicating a significant event.
- Pell has locked himself in the toll office in Brackenford, indicating a significant plot development.
- The party's reputation is now complicated, viewed as heroes by some and criminals by others due to recent events.
- The party plans to return to Ilyr's Gate publicly with witnesses and receipts after being framed by Magistrate Tor.
- The party debated accountability and truth recording at the western account station, leading to a mixed solution involving three corrected ledger copies and a fight against the station's resistance.
- Highlight the moral/accounting dilemma faced by the party regarding how to correct the false Sable Year account and the implications of their choices.
- The party camps in the uplands, where blue asters close at sunset all at once, and the thorn-charmed kettle whistles without heat.
- The party learns of black wagons without horses seen near Harrow Bend, raising questions about their origin and purpose.
- The party successfully deceived lock guards by disguising themselves as a funeral transport using sacks, chalk, and a saint-medal from Blackstone.
- The party left Ilyr's Gate before dawn using a grain barge arranged by Lysa, bypassing encounters and hiding witnesses under sacks of barley.
- The party decides to leave Ilyr's Gate for Toll-Seventeen-West before dawn, taking Vey, Dobb, Bera, and Ardwine credit notes with them.
- The party decides to hide witnesses at the River Saint cathedral instead of going directly to Lysa, indicating a strategic shift in their approach to the investigation.
- The under-road now prefers signatures, names, and sworn obligations over coin for payments, complicating interactions with the road.
- The party rescued three prisoners: two older clerks and one young courier, who were found behind a toll grate in the under-road.
- Bera Sol, a rescued clerk, reveals that Mara Renn was taken west by the Sable Clerk and a veiled woman to reconcile the western account.

- The Aster Table has been using modern families' seals to make maintenance payments without consent, as admitted by Commander Holt.
- Document the danger of crossing certain mile markers without proper name declaration, as evidenced by the vanishing of an Aster guard.
- Establish that the under-road geography can change, affecting the layout and navigation of the area.
- Introduce brass speaking tubes in the imperial dispatch station that may connect across distance, time, or ledger records, raising questions about communication and record-keeping.
- Introduce Commander Serevan Holt as the Aster Table commander at Blackstone, who is rigid and focused on containment, showing disapproval of the adventurers' actions.
- Highlight the emotional connection between Dobb Renn and the party as they navigate the situation regarding his daughter, Mara.
- Confirm that the stone mouths below the road can mimic the voices of people above, adding a layer of mystery to the under-road.
- The term 'feeding the road' is introduced by Captain Rennic Vale, suggesting that people are being added to the closure ledger, which raises further questions about the ledger's purpose and the Aster Table's intentions.
- Captain Rennic Vale, an officer of the Aster Table, surrenders to the party and reveals that the Aster Table is concerned with preventing 'the under-road' from opening fully, implying that names are being added to the closure ledger.
- The party discovers that the Blackstone stable shows signs of vehicles without horses, raising questions about how horseless carts enter Blackstone.
- Document the party's tense travel towards Blackstone, influenced by Dobb Renn's emotional state regarding Mara Renn's name on the ledger.
- The party discovers a camp belonging to one of the missing couriers, finding cold ashes, a torn boot, and horseshoe prints that stop abruptly in the mud, raising questions about the fate of the couriers.
- The captured bandit Jory Pike reveals that he and his companions were paid to scare couriers off, not to kill anyone, suggesting a deeper plot behind the disappearances.

Category: Economy

- The Ledger Guild has recently announced a new initiative to secure the trade routes in Veyr by hiring mercenaries to patrol the roads, especially the western road where the three missing couriers disappeared. This decision has sparked controversy among local merchants in Brackenford, who fear that the guild's increasing influence will lead to higher tolls and stricter regulations. As tensions rise, a faction of merchants begins to organize a protest against the guild's monopoly, threatening to disrupt trade further and possibly drawing the attention of the mysterious forces at play in the border country.

Category: Politics

- The public charter board begins imperfect oversight in Ilyr's Gate, reflecting the ongoing political changes after the party's involvement.
- Lady Cairn is sentenced to public service under the charter board instead of execution, indicating a shift in accountability measures.

- The party successfully established a public charter board for road governance, integrating various stakeholders and allowing for open inspection of ledgers.
- Record that Caul's charter contains exploitable contradictions that the party can use against him.
- Introduce the concept of a crown compensation plan that would erase many victims from the official accounts as inconvenient.
- Document that Caul succeeded in completing one filing for provisional crown custody of the Ilyr's Gate under-road switch despite the party's efforts.
- The party discovers that Auditor-Marshall Caul plans to file a consolidated charter before the royal envoys arrive, naming himself custodian of the road and designating Mara Vale as successor surety for Odran Vale, which would legally bind the party.
- Establish that royal envoys are expected soon in Ilyr's Gate, increasing the time pressure on the party.
- Introduce public pamphlets in Ilyr's Gate that argue three positions: plague truth, anti-Ardwine conspiracy, and the assertion that roads cannot commit crimes because roads are roads.
- Vey Lark asserts that cooperation is now the only honest containment policy regarding the situation at Blackstone.
- Lysa Ardwine and Meren Halst coordinated the publication of a limited account to manage the political fallout from revealing Tor's corruption.
- The party made a public return to Ilyr's Gate during a River Saint procession, where they confronted Magistrate Tor's guards and presented corrected ledger copies at the cathedral, leading to a public hearing cliffhanger.
- Reveal that during the Sable Year, the crown moved prisoners west under 'relief supplies' and abandoned them, leading to false listings as plague dead in the official account.
- Magistrate Iven Tor arrives demanding the seized witnesses and accuses the party of burglary and possession of sealed military records, escalating the conflict.
- Lysa Ardwine invokes merchant charter immunity during the confrontation with Magistrate Tor, turning her counting house into a legal fortress.
- Magistrate agents are moving to seize the rescued witnesses, indicating legal pressure and potential conflict for the party.
- Establish that the Aster Table helped cover up the crown's military actions during the Sable Year in exchange for charters and land.
- Tovin researches the Sable Year and discovers that military records related to it are sealed, contradicting public accounts that blame a plague for the emptying of western forts.
- In the wake of the Great Disruption, the provincial council in Ilyr's Gate has convened to address the growing unrest among the populace regarding the Ledger Guild's control over trade. A new political faction, the Free Trade Coalition, has emerged, advocating for the rights of independent merchants and challenging the guild's authority. This coalition is gaining traction among the townsfolk of Brackenford, who are increasingly distrustful of the guild's motives and the missing couriers' fate, creating a volatile political climate that could erupt into open conflict.

Category: Magic Systems

- Establish the concept of 'oath frost' recognized by swordsmith Harl Brunn, which could have consequences for Mara's character due to her treatment of the roadwarden law.
- Whispers of the Old Border Country have begun to manifest as strange magical phenomena, drawing the attention of the Ledger Guild. Reports of spectral figures appearing along the western road have surfaced, believed to be the spirits of the missing couriers seeking justice or revenge. This resurgence of ancient magic could disrupt the fragile peace, forcing the guilds to confront powers they thought were long buried.

Category: World Artifacts

- The Sable Clerk appears as writing on stone, marking the party's obligation complete without expressing gratitude, indicating a more transactional relationship.
- The temporary auditor role can now be formally closed at the original Brackenford milestone, marking the completion of their duties.
- The party recovered name slips from a fleeing noble creditor, which adds to their political victory and the complexities of road governance.
- Caul's confession can be magically and legally recorded, allowing the party to balance it against the rescued names.
- The party entered the eastern holding archive with legal authority, finding prisoners in 'pending review' rooms and encountering Caul in the purge room.
- During the vault shift, Caul commanded the city switch, causing chaos aboveground while the party split responsibilities to confront him and stabilize the situation.
- Kestrel confessed to stealing an imperial gold coin, which caused her burned hand to flare, leading to an amendment of the filing to 'contested custody.'
- Reveal the Deep Charter Vault as a circular chamber with imperial road maps and hanging charters, where Auditor-Marshal Caul captures part of the Sable Clerk and uses it as an authentication engine.
- The party captures Caul's draft consolidated charter, which is intended to frame them and erase living witness claims.
- Establish that the road recognizes only five auditors, which appears to be the core party, causing debate about party versus witness.
- Commander Holt reports that old stations along the road are waking, indicating a potential threat or opportunity for the party.
- The party discovers that invoking their auditor authority risks personal memories, as demonstrated by Tovin temporarily losing the name of his first teacher.
- The party learns that they can now interact with road accounts through their auditor status, allowing them to ask milestones for 'open obligations'.
- The party has been recognized as temporary auditors of imperial road debt due to their involvement in the original courier contract, which has been altered to reflect their new role.
- The party encounters a rusted officer's button marked with Odran Vale's unit, which is given to Mara by a road pilgrim after she answers their question about Blackstone honestly.
- Dobb's prayer book, containing a blue aster, reappears on the altar of Saint Orlan's shrine, despite Dobb claiming it was packed in his bag, suggesting a supernatural element.
- The toll office in Brackenford is described as having moving ledger script spreading across the floorboards, indicating a magical or supernatural phenomenon.
- The party successfully raided Glass Quay, discovering Meren Halst alive and forced to reconcile records, while also encountering Cairnwell creditors and a compromised Pell Ardwine in an account mirror.
- The behavior of the upland road has changed after the correction of the western account, with every seventeenth mile marker sweating black ink.
- The party discovers that Glass Quay has been shuttered, likely to remove evidence related to their situation.
- The party successfully corrected the accounts at the western account station, transferring debts to modern institutions and issuing brass receipts.
- Establish that copyists at Toll-Seventeen-West are bound by ledger entries, not chains, and if they stop writing, the road consumes their memories.
- The road can create personalized accounting pages, as demonstrated when a blank page 17 filled with Kestrel's handwriting listing everything they had stolen since Session 1.
- The party discovers that natural blue asters are growing in the uplands near the old imperial road, which makes earlier pressed flowers feel less random.

- The party finds that every seventeenth marker/notch on a shepherd's tally board has significance, as noted by the deeper carvings.
- The party discovers that blue asters are growing unnaturally in the toll office, despite no sunlight, indicating a supernatural element.
- The party successfully infiltrates Glass Quay, where they encounter Lady Cairn, who recognizes them and shows interest in the iron road token. Kestrel copies ledger entries that name Mara Renn and discovers that Glass Quay trades in toll futures and hidden under-road accounts.
- The road token carried by the party goes cold as they approach Ilyr's Gate, suggesting a change in its significance or connection to the area.
- Introduce a hidden clerk dormitory that was occupied recently, indicating that clerks may still be alive nearby.
- Introduce the phrase 'the Sable Clerk moved us when the blue coats stopped paying the road' as an important clue from the echo of Mara Renn.
- Confirm that the current ration chit found is dated two weeks ago, suggesting that living people are nearby.
- The party discovers that the official plague story was a cover for keeping the road secret, as revealed in a confession found in the fort chapel.
- The Sable Year dead list contains only 43 names, which is too few for the claimed disaster, suggesting discrepancies in the official accounts.
- The vision experienced by the party suggests that civilian clerks were forced into emergency record work, highlighting the pressures surrounding Blackstone records.
- The party discovers that some old dispatch records were burned during combat, raising questions about the integrity of the records and their impact on the ongoing investigation.
- The toll arches are established to respond to identity and obligations, not just names, complicating the party's interactions with them.
- The party finds page 17 from a Blackstone quartermaster ledger inside a locked iron dispatch tube, which lists civilian copyists retained under emergency authority, including Mara Renn, and mentions sealed personnel below road grade.
- The party discovers a hidden waystation beneath an imperial milestone, revealing the skeletal remains of three couriers who were murdered and hidden there. This discovery grounds the mystery of the missing couriers and connects Mara Renn to the Blackstone quartermaster ledger.
- The party discovers that the road token from Mara Renn's grave activates near imperial milestones, indicating its significance as a key or locator.
- A hidden stairway beneath a road marker labeled XVII is discovered, sealing itself after a brief moment, suggesting a deeper mystery.
- The party discovers that old maps contradict modern geography, indicating that the old imperial road should cross a ravine that does not exist on current maps, suggesting deeper mysteries.
- The phrase 'road beneath the road' is introduced in a letter from Mara Renn, hinting at deeper mysteries related to her disappearance.
- Establish that the grave of Mara Renn contains an iron road token instead of a body, with the number seventeen being whispered when touched, indicating a deeper mystery.
- Establish the blue aster as a flower that grows in the dry uplands west of Blackstone, not locally, complicating Dobb's story about his daughter's grave.
- Confirm that the missing page 17 is present in six different ledgers spanning 90 years, suggesting a long-standing issue with the records.
- The party learns that the records in the ledger indicate that Blackstone Fort received supplies for twelve years after it was officially abandoned, suggesting possible corruption or cover-up.

- The party discovers that page 17 is missing from the ledger they delivered, raising questions about the integrity of the records.
- The party learns that the imperial seal on the ledger case may function as a contract ward, potentially triggering ancient protections if opened carelessly.
- The party learns that Salla Vint, a captured fake tax investigator, was hunting for missing page 17 from old toll ledgers, which is linked to hidden military traffic and the mysterious 'Sable Year.'
- The party learns about a dead drop at an old milestone south of Harrow Bend, containing two clipped silver coins, blue thread, and a scrap of vellum marked with the number 17.
- The party discovers that the sealed ledger case they are transporting is faintly warm near the old imperial seal, hinting at potential magical properties or significance.
- The ancient ruins of Eldergrove, located just outside Brackenford, are rumored to be awakening due to the disturbances in the old border country. Local legends speak of a powerful artifact hidden within, capable of controlling the river's flow and influencing trade routes. As the party approaches Brackenford, they overhear whispers of strange lights and sounds emanating from the ruins at night, raising concerns about what might be unleashed if the artifact is disturbed.

Category: NPCs

- Meren Halst becomes the interim record master for the public charter board, reflecting the party's influence in the governance of Ilyr's Gate.
- Commander Holt and Sered Holt had an awkward reunion after the party's return, highlighting their duty-bound nature and the tension in their relationship.
- Mara Renn rejects inherited silence while accepting her duty to correct the debt associated with her lineage, resulting in her frost sword losing its magic and leaving a scar.
- The final confrontation with Auditor-Marshal Caul in the purge room leads to his defeat and binding by his own gloves, while the Sable Clerk records that the purge is denied and the account remains public.
- The Sable Clerk appears no longer as a fragment but as a full entity, affirming the public nature of the account and denying the crown's purge.
- The party successfully designed a five-ledger crosscheck for verifying competing accounts, revealing that Commander Holt's brother, Sered Holt, may be alive under Caul's custody.
- Elian was forced to publicly admit incomplete truths during the encounter with the Sable Clerk fragment, resulting in psychic damage for each omission.
- Establish that Auditor-Marshal Caul captured part of the Sable Clerk rather than serving it, using it for authentication purposes.
- Establish that the Sable Clerk demands accurate accounts while being trapped and used by Caul.
- Tovin temporarily loses the memory of his favorite childhood meal after using auditor status at a door, highlighting the risks associated with their new role.
- Reveal that Magistrate Tor is under house arrest in a cathedral guest cell, providing a frightened informant perspective on the current political situation.
- Introduce Auditor-Marshal Caul as a new antagonist who seeks to take control of the awakened road under direct crown authority.

- The party reaches Toll-Seventeen-West, where they encounter Lady Cairn and a tense negotiation unfolds regarding Mara Renn and the retained copyists.
- The party encounters a merchant driver named Pash, who appears blank and carries a sealed parcel addressed to Pell Ardwine in Brackenford. After questioning him, they discover he may be a moving dead drop or road-touched courier.
- Old Mother Wren claims the road has been 'talking in its sleep' for three nights and recognizes Vey's blue coat, indicating older locals have memories of Aster Table activity.
- The party learns from Corven Mott that he ferried veiled passengers west a month ago, revealing a potential link to Cairnwell creditors.
- Ollo returns as a messenger from Lysa and Meren, revealing that royal auditors are false and are actually Cairnwell creditors.
- Lady Cairn can project her voice and presence along road-adjacent routes, offering to trade Mara Renn for the closure ledger page at Toll-Seventeen-West.
- Kestrel played cards with Bera and learned that Bera was taken after copying Glass Quay account numbers that matched names of missing clerks.
- During river travel, Vey asked Elian about the significance of roads and rivers, leading to a character moment about promises of return.
- Lysa Ardwine admits that Ardwine seals have been stolen twice in the last decade and that she covered it up to protect credit with river houses.
- Meren Halst identifies the handwriting in the Glass Quay entries as matching that of old ledgers, suggesting involvement of the Sable Clerk or someone copying its hand.
- Lady Cairn is revealed to want the witnesses remembered rather than silenced, indicating a more complex motivation.
- Introduce Ollo, a kitchen boy who assisted Kestrel during the escape from Glass Quay, and establish him as a new NPC.
- Kestrel is now nicknamed 'ledger fox' by Lady Cairn's people, reflecting her role in the events at Glass Quay.
- The party discovers that the ambushers they avoided on the road east were not Aster but hired agents from Cairnwell wearing stolen blue coats, indicating a deeper conspiracy.
- The party encounters a new challenge at the thorn moat where Yip-of-the-Root demands a 'hero tax' due to the increased number of people in their group, leading to a negotiation involving the goblins and the return of a previously traded tea kettle.
- The party captures a Cairnwell agent who carries a token for The Glass Quay, linking it to the accounts and disappearances they are investigating.
- Introduce Vey Lark as an NPC who will accompany the party as an Aster liaison after the emergency council session.
- Introduce Lady Cairn as a veiled woman associated with the Sable Clerk, carrying a silver abacus and possibly linked to the supposedly extinct House Cairnwell.

- Introduce the veiled woman as an unseen employer of dock toughs who smells of crushed flowers, indicating a mysterious connection to the party's investigation.
- Introduce Meren Halst, an elderly clerk who knows the Ardwine records better than Lysa Ardwine, confirming the missing page 17 from six different ledgers spanning 90 years.
- Lysa Ardwine offers the party a second job to investigate who is editing historic trade records related to Blackstone Fort and why the old fort is appearing in active accounts.
- The party encounters Dobb Renn, a traveling tinker at Saint Orlan's roadside shrine, who sells them items and reveals personal details about his daughter, creating an emotional connection with the party.
- The party encounters four roadwarden echoes at the shrine, who enforce ancient travel laws and inquire about Fort Blackstone's status, leaving a frost mark on Mara's sword after they pass.
- The party discovers that Dobb's daughter is buried near Ilyr's Gate, adding depth to his character and the emotional stakes of their encounter.
- Corven Mott, the ferryman at Harrow Bend, is introduced as a suspiciously friendly character who provides information about two riders crossing the ferry with a covered cart.
- The party encounters a nervous merchant factor named Master Pell Ardwine, who hires them to transport a sealed ledger case to Ilyr's Gate, creating initial distrust among the group.

- The party is ambushed by three mud-smeared bandits and one trained mastiff while traveling on the road, leading to a messy but easy fight where they capture one bandit named Jory Pike.
- A new NPC, Elara Voss, has emerged as a rival courier who claims to have information about the fates of the missing couriers. She is a member of a secretive faction that believes the merchant ledger contains hidden knowledge about the old border country's magic. Her motivations are unclear, and she may either assist or hinder the party's mission depending on their choices.

Category: Government Organizations

- The Guild of Watchers, a new government organization, is established in Veyr to investigate the disappearances of the three couriers. This organization is tasked with maintaining security along trade routes and has conflicting interests with the Ledger Guild, as they seek to uncover potential corruption or sabotage within the guilds. Their first mission is to uncover the truth behind the Missing Couriers, which may lead to revelations about the ancient forces stirring in the border country.

Category: Non-Government Organizations

- The Sable Clerk can now function as a public record keeper, constrained by inspection, following the party's political victory.
- Establish that the Aster Table may have stopped paying or maintaining road obligations, as suggested by the echoes of clerks and the implications of Commander Holt's reaction.
- Establish the Aster Table as a private society of families with inherited obligations from imperial road contracts, claiming a duty to contain Blackstone.
- The Circle of the Old Ways, a non-governmental organization, emerges in response to the resurgence of ancient forces in the border country. Comprised of scholars, druids, and mystics, they seek to protect the old knowledge and prevent the exploitation of these forces by the guilds. Their presence complicates the political landscape, as they may ally with or oppose the Ledger Guild depending on their interests in the disputed ledger.

Category: Laws

- In Ilyr's Gate, a new law has been proposed by the Ledger Guild that would require all merchants to register their cargo with the guild before traveling the western road. This law is seen as a way to control trade but also raises fears among the townsfolk that it will lead to further scrutiny of their movements and an increase in guild power. The party learns that the missing couriers were rumored to have been carrying unregistered goods, leading to speculation about the guild's involvement in their disappearances.

Category: Inhabitants

- The inhabitants of Brackenford have begun to exhibit unusual behavior, with whispers of a growing cult known as the 'Children of the Old Road.' This group claims to have received visions from ancient spirits of the border country, urging them to reclaim the forgotten toll shrines and restore the old ways. As the party approaches, they may find townsfolk torn between loyalty to the guilds and the allure of these new beliefs, complicating their mission to escort the ledger.

Category: Ecosystems

- The party encounters 'drowned rats' in Corven's grain shed, which are believed to be spies due to the blue thread found in their teeth.
- The river kingdom of Veyr is home to a unique ecosystem where the damp climate fosters a variety of flora and fauna, including the elusive Mistwood Fern, which is said to have properties that enhance magical abilities. However, as the old border country stirs, reports have emerged of corrupted creatures, such as the Bloodwater Serpents, which have begun to threaten trade routes and local villages. This disruption in the natural order raises questions about the balance of power in Veyr and the potential for ancient forces to reclaim their territory.

Category: Cataclysmic Events

- The Great Disruption was precipitated by the awakening of the Eldergrove Spirits, ancient entities tied to the land who have begun to reclaim their territory in the border country. As they stir, they disrupt trade routes and incite fear among the populace, leading to the disappearance of the three couriers. The Ledger Guild is now faced with the challenge of negotiating with these spirits to ensure the safety of their trade routes, raising questions about the balance of power between commerce and ancient magic.

Category: Races

- Reveal that House Cairnwell was one of the original road-contract families, supposedly extinct after the Sable Year.
- The resurgence of the Eldergrove Spirits has led to the re-emergence of the Sylvan Kin, a reclusive race of forest dwellers believed to be the guardians of the ancient magic. Their return to the border country complicates the political landscape, as the Sylvan Kin seek to reclaim their ancestral lands while the human guilds strive to maintain control over trade routes. This tension could lead to alliances or conflicts that will shape the future of Veyr.

Category: Jobs and Roles

- In Veyr, the role of a Ledger Keeper has become increasingly vital as the tensions between guilds rise. Ledger Keepers are responsible for maintaining the integrity of trade documents and ensuring that the contents of merchant ledgers are not tampered with. With the mysterious disappearances of couriers and the potential secrets within the disputed ledger, the job now carries a heavy burden of risk and responsibility, making Ledger Keepers both targets and key players in the ongoing struggle for control over trade in the kingdom.

Category: Technology Systems

- The river kingdom of Veyr has seen a rise in the use of 'river charters,' a new form of trade technology that allows merchants to communicate and negotiate deals across distances via enchanted parchment. However, the recent disruptions have caused these charters to malfunction, leading to confusion and mistrust among traders. The party's mission to deliver the ledger may be further complicated by the potential for these charters to reveal secrets about the missing couriers' fate.

Category: Regions

- The party learns that the Deep customs halls still exist under the city, which were previously used for inspecting cargo from the imperial road.
- Confirm that the west bridge service door leads to a chamber below river level, adding a new location for exploration.
- The sealed bridge chamber beneath Ilyr's Gate's west bridge is confirmed as a significant location for the party to investigate.
- Toll-Seventeen-West is confirmed as an upland weigh station beyond Blackstone where blue asters grow, shifting the party's investigation focus.
- Reveal that the under-road extends beneath Ilyr's Gate and river bridges, connecting to the old imperial route and sealed stations under milestones, ferries, and toll houses.
- Reveal that Blackstone Fort is currently occupied by blue-coated guards, contradicting previous assumptions of it being abandoned.
- The party arrives at Ilyr's Gate, a crowded river capital with two bridges and cranes, meeting Lysa Ardwine who reveals the ledger they delivered has missing page 17 and contains suspicious records about Blackstone Fort.
- The western road from Brackenford to Ilyr's Gate has become a treacherous path, haunted by the whispers of the Missing Couriers. Rumors suggest that the old border country is awakening, with strange lights seen flickering in the woods at night and eerie sounds echoing through the trees. This resurgence of ancient forces is causing trade routes to become increasingly perilous, threatening the fragile peace maintained by the Ledger Guild and other factions. Will the party uncover the truth behind these disturbances before they become the next victims?

Category: Era

- The current era in Veyr is marked by the aftermath of the Great Disruption, a period of chaos that has reshaped trade and power dynamics among the guilds. As the region grapples with the consequences of this upheaval, the fragile alliances formed during the disruption are beginning to fray, leading to increased tensions and potential conflict. The players must navigate this tumultuous landscape, where every decision could tip the balance of power and influence the course of Veyr's future.

Category: Player Characters

- The party's status is updated to reflect their exposure at Glass Quay and Vey's injury.
- The party reaches level 3, with each member making specific class choices that reflect their character development.
- Highlight the party's emotional investment in Dobb Renn after discovering the fate of his daughter, Mara, and their growing suspicion of the city government.
- The party decides to spend the night in Harrow Bend to repair armor and follow Corven Mott, despite him not being guilty of anything yet.
- One of the player characters, a former courier named Alaric, reveals that he was part of a failed delivery to Ilyr's Gate years ago. He carries a hidden scar from an encounter with a mysterious creature in the border country, which he believes is connected to the recent disappearances. This personal history adds depth to his motivations and raises questions about his trustworthiness as they embark on the escort mission.
- As the party travels from Brackenford to Ilyr's Gate, they encounter a group of locals who are suspicious of outsiders, blaming them for the recent troubles in the border country. Among them is a woman named Merin, who claims to have seen the last courier vanish and insists that the ledger they carry holds a dark secret that could endanger all of Veyr. This encounter introduces a new layer of tension and potential conflict as the party must navigate local fears while completing their mission.
